

Future Flood™

The Future of Flood is Here

In their pursuit of home ownership, first-time homebuyers today expect simple and quick access to comprehensive information. Seasoned mortgage customers demand forward-thinking attention to the details impacting their experience of owning a home and protecting their investment. Service level expectations, combined with unprecedented regulatory and investor scrutiny, present new challenges for lenders and servicers striving to meet their regulatory obligations and the needs of borrowers across the spectrum. How do you create an efficient experience for your customers while providing more information, flexibility and transparency?

Introducing Future Flood™. Through our investments in resources, data and technology, flood information that will become effective and official in the near future is now available to you. With Future Flood from CoreLogic®, you can provide new homebuyers and existing borrowers the valuable flood information and transparency they expect.

Why Future Flood?

FEMA releases pending flood map data after it has passed through various appeals and regulatory processes. Once released, the information will become official on the effective date. Communities, insurance agents, insurance companies and government agencies are increasingly providing this pending information to homeowners earlier in the process. With Future Flood, lenders and servicers now leverage this information to help facilitate a positive borrower experience with the potential that your borrower may save thousands of dollars in flood premiums over the life of the loan.

The future of flood is here.
